Analysts Differ on Iran's Prospects for Success

By Drew Middleton New York Times Service .

NEW YORK - Intelligence analysts in Washington, London and several capitals in the Middle East have differing views over the Iranians' prospects in their invasion of Iraq. The view in London and Washington is that the Iranians are taking up where they left off in late May, when they swiftly and relatively easily recaptured the port city of Khorram-shahr to cap an offensive that had rolled the Iraqi Army out of Iran. These analysis believe the Iranians will seize Basra and possibly move north toward Baghdad in the hope that this advance might suffice to unseat Iraq's president, Saddam Hussein. That is one of Iran's objectives.

Other sources with a more intimate view of the two antagonists do not believe that Iran. will have an easy time. One said that the in-vading army would face an entirely new situa-

The Iranians, he said, would be fighting in hostile country at the end of a long line of communications. He said he doubted whether Iran had the logistical resources to maintain four or five divisions far from its bases. Command and control of an army in enemy territory, be said, will be more difficult than it was en the Iranians were repelling an invasion.

The analysts generally agree that the Iraqi Army, fighting in defense of its homeland, is likely to be more aggressive and resilient than the tired troops who surrendered by the thou-sands when Iran launched its counteroffensive.

Under these conditions, the analysts say, some weaknesses in the Iranian military forces may begin to show.

The Iranian Army, as it is now constituted, is a mixture of regular soldiers, many of them veterans of the shah's army, and young Revolutionary Guards. The guards' human-wave tactics against Irani positions had much to do with the success of the counteroffensive. But so did the skillful use by the regulars and their young officers of the combined arms doctrine utilizing armor, artiflery and infantry.

Some analysts say they expect that the first evere check in battle will cause an eruption of the antagonism between the regulars and the guards that has been smoldering since the guards took their place in the line. In fighting in March, these sources said, the Iranians had the advantage of surprise and were spurred on tionary fervor to recover their lost

Neither of these two conditions would be present in an invasion of Iraq.

One of the unknowns is the state of the Iraman armored forces, and analysts say that any significant advance into Iraq would have to be made with armored forces. Even when fighting close to their own bases, the Iranians had difficulties maintaining their British Chieftain and American M-60 tanks.

Another problem for the invaders, the analysts say, would be Iraq's store of Frog-7 and Scud missiles. These have been used sparingly in the war thus far.

Finally, it is uncertain how many of the $2 billion worth of weapons ordered by Iraq since the war began have been delivered. These in-clude Roland missiles from France, infantry fighting yehicles from Spain, light tanks from Austria and missiles from Brazil. French Mirage fighters also have been ordered.

In the event that a high percentage of these weapons have been delivered and troops trained to use them, Iraq's ability to rebuff an invasion must be considered improved, analysis say. They say another consideration would be the probability that the Gulf countries would extend aid to Iraq.

This section gives the president flexibility to use U.S. troops in situations that he deems not to be dangerous and does not impose a time limit on him. The deputy White House press secretary, Larry M. Speakes, said that Mr. Reagan was still uncer-tain which section he would use.

Critics of the proposal to send forces to Lebanon, led by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., Republican of Tennessee, have objected to any role beyond an escort service for the PLO.

When Mr. Reagan first an-nounced that about 1,000 Marines might go into Lebanon, he broached the possibility that in addition to guaranteeing safe pas-sage, they might also "assist in the transition of authority to the Lebanese government in Beirut."

New York Times Service JERUSALEM - More than five weeks after the Israeli Army invaded Lebanon and fought its way northward to Beirut, the number of civilian casualties remains unknown. The chaos of the warfare, the destruction of city neighborhoods and refugee camps, the haste with which bodies were buried in mass graves and the absence of impartial agencies gathering statistics have made an accounting impossible But it is clear to anyone who has traveled in southern Lebanon, as many journalists and re-lief workers now have, that the original figures of 10,000 dead and 600,000 homeless, reported by correspondents quoting the Beirut repre-sentative of the International Committee of the Red Cross during the first week of the war, were extreme exaggerations.

How the Red Cross arrived at such numbers is not known. Since communications between the south and Beirut were cut, and since there was no access to the area, no reliable estimate of the dead and homeless could have been made at that early stage. But the figures were accepted, even by U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who said in a television appearance June 20: "There are tens of thousands of people who have been killed and recorded serviced wounded now in Lebanon who had nothing to do with any side of this conflict."

The Red Cross later revised its estimate of the number of homeless to 300,000. Again, this seems much too high to those who have spent time in the region, but it is difficult to make a count. There are no huge encampments of ref-ugees; most of the homeless have crowded into relatives' houses.

Israeli figures have also been unreliable. For more than a week after the invasion, the Israeli Army kept foreign correspondents out of the areas where the heaviest fighting had occurred, thereby creating a vacuum of information in which the exaggerations flourished. No statistics were released by Israel until June 22, more than the exaggeration of the invasion when the than two weeks after the invasion, when the Foreign Ministry, belatedly aware that the Red Cross figures had been widely accepted, issued some numbers that seem to have severely understated the casualties.

The Foreign Ministry said that about 20,000 people had been made bomeless and that 460 to 470 civilians had been killed and 1,600 wounded in the fighting. The deaths were listed as 10 in Nabatiye, 50 to 60 in Tyre and 400 in Sidon. Later, the figures were revised with-out explanation to 265 dead in Sidon and 56 dead in Tyre.

The Israelis stressed that they had dropped leaflets and broadcast warnings to the civilian populations of Tyre and Sidnn and that many includes the attack, assembling on the beaches during most of the fighting. Furthermore, soldiers were instructed, when going into villages, not to shoot until fired upon, and troops say that these precautions cost some soldiers their lives.

Discussions with officials and residents of the cities tend to reinforce the Israeli estimates; the mayor of Tyre, for example, says 62

But the Israeli figures exclude the 200 civilians reported killed in air strikes during the two days before the invasion. They ignore West Beirut, which has been pounded by air and artillery attacks. They ignore the Palestinian refugee camps near Tyre and Sidon, where heavy fighting occurred, and where there is so much rubble that bodies may still be buried.

The destruction is so extensive in some of the camps, especially Ein Khilwe near Sidon and Burj el-Shemali and Rashidiye near Tyre, that the Israeli Army tries to keep correspondents and other visitors out.

Beatings by Israelis Alleged

WASHINGTON (NYT) — A Canadian surgeon said Tuesday that he saw two prisoners beaten to death by Israeli soldiers in a makeshift prison camp in Sidon and witnessed the dropping of cluster bombs on a refugee camp near his hospital.

Dr. Christopher Giannou, 33, who works for the Palestine Red Crescent Society, described "savage and indiscriminate" beatings by about 40 Israeli soldiers after he and other members of the hospital staff were arrested and detained from June 13 to June 16.

"The physical abuse ranged from simple punching and kicking to beatings with wooden sticks, plastic hose, or even a bunch of pieces of rope with note and bolis tied to the ends," Dr. Giannou told members of the House for-eign affairs subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

Nachman Shai, the Israeli press spokesman in Washington, denied the charges. He said Dr. Giannon "is suspected of belonging to a European terrorist organization, and he was arrested because of this. It was only because of strong pressure from Canada that we released

Effect of Lebanon War On Israel's Economy Is Surprisingly Slight

By Norman Kempster

Los Angeles Times Service
JERUSALEM — The effect of the war in Lebanon on Israel's domestic economy has been surpris-ingly small despite a mobilization of military reserves that stripped some companies of up to 40 percent of their manpower.

The minister of industry and commerce, Gideon Patt, said the nation's industrial output fell by about 8 percent to the first days of the war, which began June 6, but hy the end of the manth much of the lost production had been made up. For all of last month, he said, productioo slipped by 5 percent compared to figures for a year ago. "Ninety-five percent of the indus-trial production was in full gear," Mr. Patt said.

Throughout Israel, economic matters have returned to oormal after dislocations early in the war. In Israel, beset by triple digit inflation, "oormal" is always a bit chaotic but there have been no severe shortages and no noticeable

After the first few weeks of the war, which is in its fifth week, the army began rotating reservists, sending home many of the men who saw combat duty to the early days of the conflict. The result minimized the impact of the mobi-lization on individual businesses.

Mr. Patt said that the initial callup of reservists affected only about 15 percent of the todustrial work force. But he said some companies - particularly those to the metals, electronics and construction industries that employ high percentages of men - lost between 30 percent to 40 percent of their work forces.

Productivity rose substantially last month. Mr. Patt said. Workers who were not called into the army worked longer hours and performed more efficiently. And there were no labor disputes, a highly unusual situation in Israel, where strikes and worker sanctions are economic fixtures.

From a statistical standpoint, productivity usually increases when the size of the work force said. Yehuda Meltzer, a philoso-drops temporarily, especially if a pby professor at Tel Aviv Univerwas originally over-

Mobutu Delays Visit;

Belgium Is Relieved

Economists say that most Israeli firms hire more workers than they really need to make up for fre-quent reserve call-ups. Even in peacetime, most Israeli men up to the age of 54 are required to perform about 45 days of reserve army service each year. The Israeli Army estimates the direct cost of the war so far at between $1 billion and $1.25 billion. Israel has imposed taxes that will yield about half that amount.

With inflation already running at more than 100 percent a year, the consequences of failing to cover the cost of the war through taxes or other means could be severe. Some analysts estimate that the rate of inflation could double, although Mr. Patt said this assessment is far too pessimistic. However, he conceded that the government will not meet its goal of reducing inflation below 100 percent this year.

Bonn Intercepts Computer Goods Bound for Russia

The Associated Press BONN - West German customs officials made two seizures of American computer equipment last week after U.S. customs officials warned that the goods were being illegally exported to the Soviet Union, government officials said Wednesday.

The seizures were made in Frankfurt and at the Munich airport after the U.S. government in-formed the West Germans that it expected the equipment to move through the country and asked them to stop it, a Finance Ministry spokesman, Walter Prax, said at a news conference.

The announcement confirmed a report Tuesday by the U.S. Customs Service that American-huilt high-technology computers on the way to the Soviet Union were seized July 6 in West Germany. In Washington, William von Raab, the commissioner of customs, said four complete computer systems

This could prompt Mr. Deng to force a showdown with Washing-ton on the Taiwan issue, the diplomats speculate, to protect other vulnerable aspects of his foreign and domestic policies.

STOCKHOLM — Bearing banners declaring, "No to nuclear weapons East and West," the first Western peace mission to the Soviet Union has begun a journey to Leningrad, Moscow and Minsk hoping to create a popular disarmament campaign in the East bloc.

Chilly Reception

WASHINGTON (WF) - The Reagan administration's plan to end most U.S. aid to cities received the same chilly reception Tuesday from Democratic congressmen that it has been given by mayors of those troubled cities.

Samuel R. Pierce Jr., the secretary of housing and urban development, said at a Joint Economic Committee hearing that the ad-ministration is not "abandoning our cities, as some claim" but "seeking new and better means to meet the needs of urban America."

Palace Police Ignored Alarms Rung by Queen

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches LONDON - Home Secretary William Whitelaw has confirmed that efforts by Queen Elizabeth II to alert police to an intruder in her Buckingham Palace bedroom went unheeded at first, a Conservative legislator reported Wednesday.

John Wheeler, chairman of the Conservative Home Affairs Committee in the House of Commons, said Mr. Whitelaw told his committee Tuesday that the queen's-alarm equipment apparently func-tioned but was ignored during the incident early Friday.

There was a serious breakdown of discipline at the palace," Mr. Wheeler said. He said Mr. Whitelaw gave the impression that the police attitude was, "It's that bloody bell again."

Press accounts also described the queen as furious over the police response to her alarms after the introder had evaded 43 soldiers, 24 police officers, 350 mem-bers of the palace staff, dog pa-trols, surveillance television and electronic listening devices.

Mr. Whitelaw reportedly told the committee that the queen telephoned the palace switchboard and asked for a police officer to be sent to ber apartment, but police did not respond immediately. The queen had to select her words carefully, for fear of alarming the man, The Daily Telegraph reported. Mr. Whitelaw said it was prob-

The invisible beam, placed about 15 inches (40 centimeters) inside the wall around the palace gardens and about two feet (60 centimeters) above the ground would only sound an alarm if an intruder broke it while climbing down from the wall, the paper said. But, it added, a prowler was more likely to jump, landing up to three feet away from the fence and well clear of the beam.

The Standard said the armed police officer on guard outside the queen's bedroom went off duty half an hour before the intruder broke in, entrusting the monarch's safety to unarmed staff. This was apparently a daily routine, the paper added

Press accounts said the queen awoke to find the intruder sitting on her bed clutching a broken ash-tray and dripping blood from a cut hand onto the bedcovers. The queen talked to him for approximately 10 minutes before she found an excuse to summon a royal chambermaid, who led the man away after exclaiming "Bloody hell, ma'am, what's he doing in

Iran's Larger Challenge

From THE WASHINGTON POST:

The war between Iran and Iraq is on the front page sgain. The conflict empted in 1980 when Iraq invaded a seemingly prostrate Iran. Ayatollah Khomeini, harne an American-prepared military to the fanati-cism of his youthful followers, repelled the invaders last May. Since then, Tehran has been preparing for the counter-invasion that it has now launched. Its troops are champing carry the batte to the lragis.

Iran's conditions are formidable: Iraq's vain strongman, Saddam Hussein, must go; Iraq must withdraw its forces from and its claims to all disputed territory, and it must pay immense reparations. These demands are sharpening a desperate debate among Iraq and the conservative Gulf Arabs over whether the Khomeini revolution must be fought or appeased.

In fact, Iran poses an immense triple threat to the oil-rich Arabs of the Gulf. It is the largest and — thanks to the late shah — most developed and militarily dominant state of the region. The Persian-Arah ethnic rivalry has centuries of momentum behind it. And thanks to the Ayatollah Khomeini, Iran is determined to purify, by its brand of Shiite fundamentalism, what it regards as the corrupt regimes of its neighbors.

The immediate target is Iraq, whose substantial Shiite elements and Kurdish and other minority separatisms offer Iran tempting subversive possibilities.

After that, or so they have reason to fear, come the conservative Gulf regimes whose choice to stand with Iraq against "the enemies of the Arah nation" stirred Tehran's

In May, the United States promised to join other nations in a more active quest for an Iran-Iraq peace. That was bound to be difficult, given Washington's poor relations with both countries. It was made all the harder by the war in Lebanon. Though there is no evidence of collusion between Iran and Israel, each may see advantage in operating in the

each may see advantage in operating in the cover of the other's military moves.

In 1980, the United States, eager to put pressure on Iran to release the hostages, professed itself "neutral" and said merely — permissively — that it "couldn't condone" an Iraqi grab. Now spokesmen, with an evident eye to Iran's strategic importance, again say the United States is "neutral." But the United States should not be practicing a discreet neutrality between aggressors and victims in a situation as clearcut and urgent as the one on the Gulf. U.S. influence had best be used to dissuade countries from aggression, to limit the scope of their operations and to bring their differences to a negotiating table.

God Saved the Queen

From THE WASHINGTON POST:

The bad news is, we suppose, that security at Buckingham Palace is not very good, that the Queen of England (yet) was intruded upon by a stranger, that this trespass could have ended with a terrible crime. But so far as we know, the whole thing went fairly amiably, the queen is still queen and the en-terprising fellow who sneaked his way into the palace and even into her room was removed to the care of authorities.

In the realm of security, police work and so forth, there are things the British do better than some, things they do worse and many, many things they do differently — or, as it seems, not at all.

. They are awfully good at cracking into an embassy held bostage, for instance, at the kind of project that requires well-synchronized activity and a necessarily hard-hearted commitment to prevail. This they undertake in a characteristically British spirit — that is, without a lot of fuss, And so, predictably, her majesty's subjects found Mrs. Ronald Reagan's heavy security complement during the wedding festivities last year to be a source of wonder, amusement and irritation.

The British, in other words, are far more casual-seeming about such things, less martial, less given to the screaming siren and the running-board-riding crowd. They seem to think that so far as security is concerned, more is less, and in some respects they are probably right. Experience in a thousand American office buildings and elsewhere on the security front tends to suggest that there is only so much you can do, that the wrong person, occasionally decked out in bunny ears and an Abe Lincoln hat and openly carrying a submachine gun will get through the security guard, while the person carrying a take-out lunch will be stopped and frisked for as long as it takes to ensure that the already tepid hamhurgers and coffee will be thor-oughly congealed. We are not here to complain about those security people who protect the high and lowborn among us, day in, day ont, whether at the White House or in the apartment house lobby. And we are not even going to make a big thing of the apparent casualness of the British apparatus that protects the royal family. No, what ultimately struck us—awed us really—was the utter queenliness, the absolute majesty, of the way in which Elizabeth II apparently dealt with the intruder. Cool, hospitable, polite. "How frightfully interesting. Would the visitor perhaps care for something to drink? A cigarette?"

He would and did care for a cigarette, and it was when her majesty sent for them that the security types were also summoned. But what style in between times. Victoria would have been proud. And Elizabeth I But we do run on. Unease Over the Falklands

The de facto cessation of hostilities does not create a fully satisfactory Britain. It should certainly not be portrayed as one which leads back normally to something closely akin to the status quo ante. For a start Britain has to be wary of the unstable state of Argentine politics, with a new and untried presidency, a volatile political mood, and a society fuelled by the combustion of incipient economic collapse. There can be no guarantee that the lunacy which gripped the Galtieri junta will not re-emerge in some different guise while Argentina wrestles with her inner conflicts. The temptation to lash out again at the spectre of the "hostile neighbor" will be ever present. It will require vigilance hy Britain until some freely constituted Argentine government has the courage and self-confidence to abjure war as an instrument of its Falklands policy.

A Talk With the Queen

Just how that interloper made his way into Buckingham Palace and into the bedroom of Queen Elizabeth II is intriguing. But perhaps even more so is the question of just what the two talked about for 10 minutes.

We can only presume that in the first few minutes they mentioned how damp it was outside in those early-morning hours. Then on to an exchange of regrets over England's elimination from the World Cup and how lucky ftaly was to win it. Maybe a few words bemoaning London's crime rate and how unfortunately easy it is for the bad sort to hreak in these days. After all, a woman's home is her castle. When the intruder asked for a cigarette, the queen might well have launched into a brief lecture on the evils of tobacco. And, if his condition warranted it, perhaps a brief lecture, or at least a word or two, about overindulgence in spirits. After about five minutes, it could well have been time for a royal offer of a cup of Earl Grey or an intruder's request for a pint of lager and lime.

PARIS — Automobiling up to now has been an expensive hobby. Even the smallest ma-chine has been a species of "white elephant" for the ordinary salaried man; not so much on account of its first cost as its general up-keep. Where a saving has been possible so far as petrol is concerned, there has been an increased expenditure on tires; where tires have been cheap, there has been a constant output for gears and minor repairs. The Truffault voiturette is a machine for two people and no more; to take on board a third party is to destoy the principle on which it has been built. It is a practical and simple contrivance for the man who does not place high speed above everything else.

WASHINGTON — It is easy to understand why presidential envoy Philip C. Habib, beseeched by whatever passes for a government in Lebanon these days, wants to see the U.S. Marines in Beirut. Only they, he believes, can persuade what remains of the Palestine Liberation Organization to slip away to an unwilling exile, and an uncertain reception, in whatever "brotherly" capitals will offer a refuge. -One has no problem seeing wby the Israelis also want this plan — so bad-ty, in fact, that they leaked it to the press before President Reagan had a chance to change his mind. Though they have won a glorious victory, they are not quite sure how to hold on to its fruits. Unless they can smash the PLO apparatus now cowering in Beirut's bunkers, everything that they have won so far could slip from their fingers. Unless Menachem Begin can justify the sacrifice of hundreds of Israeli soldiers, not to mention the thousands of Lebanese and Palestinians, his government could collapse under a tide of national recrimination and self-doubt.

For the Israelis, everything now hinges on getting the PLO out of Reirut and out of Lebanon once and for all. But, if they have to do so by house-to-house fighting in West Beirut, the costs, both physical and moral, would be terrible. The PLO would be martyrized, and the protracted spectacle of death and devastation could not only weaken Begin at home but also undermine whatever support the Israelis still have in the world after the last month.

No wonder Begin is so eager to see the U.S. Marines hit the beaches at Beirut and lead the PLO to some place from which it may never re-em-

It is understandable, too, that the idea should appeal to the White House, for both humanitarian and political reasons. For an administra-tion so dedicated to the accumulation of military power, how irresistible to have the chance actually to use it. What is the point of being a global superpower if one is unable to project that power?

How frustrated the White House must be these days. For what is the lesson of the past few months if not the near-total irrelevance of American military power? Irrelevant in the. Falklands dispute, irrelevant in the Iran-Iraq war, irrelevant in Poland and Afghanistan, and now intelevant in Lebanon. Of what practical use is all that military power, all those bilfion-dollar aircraft carriers and the tens of thousands of atomic weapons? In what way have they influenced the course of events in these critical areas of the world? Their only use, as should long ago have been obvious, is to deter the other musclebound nuclear Galliver: the Soviet Union, whose paralysis is of the same order of magnitude. Thus, the temptation of Ronald Reagan to follow the example of Dwight D. Eisenhower 24 years ago and send the Marines to Lebanon. That episode, one will recall, resolved little, but was harmless. Nobody was burt, and, once the Marines had landed, no one was quite sure what they were supposed to accomplish. They lingered a few weeks to sample the exotic delights of that most cosmopolitan city, then quietly left.

This time, we are not likely to be so lucky. If we do send the Marines, what assurance is there that the PLO will leave? Or that every one of its many factions will leave? Despite the defeat of their army and the devastation of their camps, the 5,000 or so hard-core militants who remain in Beirut are in a strong position. They know that no one wants to dig them out of their bunkers: not the Israelis, and certainly not the Americans.

The PLO, or at least those whn now speak for it, says that it may leave under certain conditions. But could Yasser Arafat, even if sincere, carry out such a pledge? What if he, or a dissenting subordinate leader, decides not to go once the Marines have hit the beaches? What if the PLO says "come and get us"? At that point, we either have an American war in Lebanon or we must withdraw our troops. What happens if they are fired on and some are killed? Do they fight back? While the United States should help find an bonorable exit for the PLO, the actual dispatch of an escort is a task better performed by nations far more neutral in this conflict. France has agreed to participate. Others, perhaps Norway or Sweden. should be encouraged to join.

Sending American troops could complicate, and even defeat, the criti-cal role that the United States alone can now play. Military force has gone as far as it can. Even Gen. Ariel Sharon, Israel's defense minister, knows that, The U.S. Marines can resolve nothing. choice, George Ball an imaginative one. Have the emissary find out what kind of long-term settlement might he acceptable to both sides. Then reconvene Camp David — not for another interim settlement that is allowed to dribble away, but for one that would resolve the pathetic search of the Palestinian people for a homeland.

This means leaning hard on the Israelis, as well as on the Arabs who have allowed themselves to become prisoners of the PLO and of those who use it for their own purposes.

Sending the Marines will not serve that larger objective. Let others escort the PLO to exile. Let the United States use its unique position to prod the Israelis and the Arabs into an exit from their tragic impasse.

The West obviously is responsible for Israel's creation to the extent that one Western country murdered as many European Jews as it could lay hands upon, and the others were content to solve the problem of the homeless surviving Jews in 1945-1948 at the expense of the Palestinians.

There was, as we know from wartime and postwar documents, no in-terest at all among the Western gov-ernments to see several million Jewish refugees and immigrants take up abode in the United States or Britain. There was active hostility to the idea.

But if the problem was to be settled at the expense of the Palestinian Ar-abs, it was convenient to all to pre-

Israeli governments have main-tained that the Palestinians have no legal claim on Palestine. They say there is no Palestinian movement, only "PLO terrorists". The Palestinian prisoners taken by Israeli forces in Lebanon are refused prisoner of war status under the Geneva conventions and are held as civilian detainees, with Israel reserving the right to act against those whom it identifies indi-

For the Palestinians, there is no Israel, merely Zionist occupiers with neither historical claim to the land they hold, nor any practical claim deriving from a Zionist presence since early in this century. Attacks upon Israeli civilians are not crimes, but acts of Palestinian liberation. Israel must be dissolved. Recreate the Palestine that existed befor the Zionists came, the Palestinians say, and they will have no objection to Jews intheir country — Jews who are as they were in old Palestine: inconspicuous, impolitical, and few in number.

Yasser Arafat and other "moder-ate" Palestinian leaders hint that they understand that any solution has to acknowledge Israel's existence - but they have never dared say this out loud. For many of Mr. Arafat's followers, no such complicating considerations exist. Their goal is Israel's extinction. Now, of course, they con-front the logical consequence of that commitment, their own extinction by

The two sides live on foolish and reductive views of the other the anti-Arab prejudices widely expressed in Israel and in the West in recent years resemble the anti-Jewish libels of carher years. The sinister attributions treacherousness, greed, conspiracy, lust — have been displaced from one Semite to another. Anti-Israeli polemics in the Arab countries ordinarily identify Israel with the accumulated injuries imperialism and colonialism have inflicted upon Islam. It is convenient for each side not to have to deal with recognizable humans on the other side. And it will be convenient forever, if they intend to fight forever — until the last Israeli and the last Palestinian (as a German survivor said of Verdun) "hobble out of the trenches on crutches to exterminate the other with pocket knives: or teeth and fingernails.

To say this will change no one's mind in the Middle East, of course. It is possible, however, for Americans, West Europeans, and others not directly committed to this struggle, to make some difference. If the rest of the world would scrupulously refuse to tolerate caricatures of the two sides, and would insist that both be treated as human with legitimate claims, which unhappily are also contradictory claims, but which in the end must be compromised, it would make a small, but essential, contribution to the ascent of life over death in the Middle East.

Reagan's Best Foreign Policy Play: Up the Middle With George Shultz

WASHINGTON — When George Shultz appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to be confirmed as secretary of state, one of the advisers at his side was Lloyd Cutler, counselor at the White House under President Carter.

In general, Shuitz supported President Reagan's foreign policy during the hearings, including many of its excesses and stupidities — he could scarcely have been expected to do otherwise. But the presence of Cutler tells us something about Shultz's ap-proach to his job: Namely that he recognizes that an effective U.S. foreign policy cannot be achieved by one party alone, or by a faction of among the leaders of both parties.

This has been the forgotten princi-ple in the first half of the Reagan administration. Unlike Eisenhower, who seldom considered politics in his foreign policy appointments, and even Richard Nixon, who appointed Nelson Rockefeller's buddy Henry Kissinger as chairman of the National Security Council and then as secretary of state. Reagan has tended to be personal and partisan in his foreign policy appointments and judgments - probably not because he intended to be partisan, but because be just did not think much about it.

His appointment of George Shultz is quite different. Shultz has been around Washington long enough, and out of it just long enough, to know that foreign policy is too serious to be left to the foreign policy professionals, who, as the years go by, know more and more about less and less, or to the partisan politicians, who know less and less about more and more. But above all. Shultz knows that an effective foreign policy requires a Reagan did not take this approach in the first half of his administration. He blamed the Democrats for the plight of the economy and the measce of the nuclear arms race, and all our troubles in the Middle East. The Democrats have been tempted to answer in kind and make things even worse by turning his foreign policy failures to partisan advantage.

This, one gathers, is what Shultz is trying to avoid, for if the elemental struggles over the control of nuclear weapons, the Middle East and modissues, the past will certainly dominate the future and nobody will gain except the Russians. Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Democrat of New York, recently warned against the dangers of turning the puzzles of foreign policy into partisan issues, particularly the question of controlling nuclear weapons.

"It is absolutely necessary," he said, "that this issue be raised above partisan politics. If it ever divides the parties and hence the people, we shall surely fail" Shultz obviously agrees with this.

He could not be expected to de-nounce Reagan's policies of selling some arms to Taiwan, or oppose the president's sanctions against allies who were selling American technology to complete the Siberian gas pipeline to Europe. But his enthu for using economic sanctions for political objectives seemed to be some-what limited in his testimony before the Foreign Relations Committee.

toed through the political minefield. Israel was our most reliable ally, he said, but the Arab nations were important to the vital interests of the United States. With the help of Cutler, he demonstrated that he is a master of the mystifying clarification, and by the weekend no doubt he will be established on the seventh floor of the State Department as the 60th secretary of state, with a view of the Potomac and all the monuments on the Virginia shore to the Capitol.

The question, or so it seems here, is whether he will be able to restore, as Gen. Geroge Marshall and Secretary Acheson and John Foster Dulles did after the last World War, a sense of Shultz has many good comrades for such an objective. The chairmen of the Foreign Relations and International Affairs committees in the Congress are on his side. The Republican leader in the Senate, Howard Baker of Tennessee, though he opposes Reagan's notion of sending American Marines to Lebanon, is probably the wisest politician in Washington today. And Shultz has at his disposal. without doubt, the best professional diplomatic service in the world.

But none of this will work unless he avoids a political struggle between the parties. The Democrats are spoiling for a fight against the administra-tion's economic and foreign policies, but we have over two years to go be-fore the next presidential election, and a partisan division on foreign policy between now and then could be a disaster. George Shultz is obviously conscious of this danger, and may be the hope of avoiding it. The New York Times.

Regarding "The Forecasts for Iran Have Been Wrong So Far" (IHT, June 22): Steven J. Rosen says that the forecasts by "diplomats and ob-servers" for the Iranian revolution have proved wrong. But he finds no lesson to be learned when he goes on to predict yet another non-eventuality, declaring that "if change is coming, it apparently will come from still more conservative Islamic forces than those now in power."

Iran's Riddle

If the four cases be quotes are anything to go by, it should be deduced that the Iranian faction that can keep up the fight and face death with utmost bravery will be the more likely winner in the battle against Khomeini instead of those who have had to face defeats and bumiliations after every assault by the Khomeini's regime — namely, the "more conservative Islamic forces."

This may have been the official reason but far more important is the oil and mineral wealth of Antarctica. If Britain loses the Falklands her claims to her share of Antarctica will be undermined when the treaty of neutrality is reviewed in 1990. When seen in this light the support Temporary Insanity? What is most surprising about the Terrorist Defined ...

Regarding "PLO Terrorist or Mili-tary Officer?" (IHT, July 8): Mr. Cody's "News Analysis" on Fatah terrorist versus officer has in its omission given the exact reason why the Israel uses the word "terrorist". By not mentioning that the 30 people killed on a highway were civilians traveling on a bus and not a military target, be has failed to apply the basic definition differentiating a terrorist definition differentiating a terrorist from a soldier.

He and his cohorts have acted in the worst traditions of warlords, commandering Lebanese cities, fak-ing over their buildings, schools, hospitals, churches, mosques and worst of all their women. His ultimate act of depravity was dispersing his men and weapons amongst the remaining civilians, using them as human shields to hide behind.

Little wonder f witnessed the genuine relief and joy of both Moslem and Christian alike on finally being free of PLO subjugation in these cities. Life is rapidly returning to normal as the former ousted population returns to their homes.

Boycott Israel

Regarding "Arab Baycon" (Leuers, June 25): Surely it is time that the Zionist lobby stopped whiming about the Arab boycott of Israel. Trade and economic sanctions are not used exclusively by the Arab League states.

The United States has a trade boycott against countries such as Cuba and Libya. The EEC and the United States supported Britain's call for trade sanctions against the Argen-tines in the Falklands dispute (although of course Israel chose to sell arms to the Argentines and ignore the West's boycott). Britain and the UN imposed sanctions against Rhodesia at the time of Smith's smillsteral declaration of independence.

After the carnage inflicted on the Lebanese and Palestimans in the past three weeks. I suggest the Western public enforces its own boycott of all

A Question of Money

Long shot that it is, the attempt to unseat Sen. Kennedy has aroused more interest than the previous fruitless assaults, partly because of Mr. Shamie's money and partly because national conserva-tive organizations originally seemed likely to swamp the state with support to oust "Mr. Liberal" from the Senate.

What some envisioned as the great ideological contest of 1982 has not yet come to pass, however. The National Conservative Political Action Committee says that it has invested $500,000 in an anti-Kennedy campaign, but it is conducting polls to see if spending more is worthwhile. Mr. Shamie has sunk $700,000 of his personal fortune into the effort, but he has not found as much financial help from like-minded

The Republicans are struggling to show that their man just might pull off the big one. Polls taken Mr. Shamie show a substantial increase in the number who recognize his name and a declining pro-portion wanting to re-elect Sen.

The David in this battle with Goliath is an amiable, earnest, 61-year-old businessman who built a manufacturing firm from scratch and has turned to politics, he says, to make the country safe again for such enterprise.

Mr. Shamie's solution is more, a coalition of traditional Republicans with working-class voters, much like the one Mr. Reagan achieved two years ago.

The evidence is slim that Mr. Shamie can put that together, given Sen. Kennedy's demonstrated vote-getting ability. The only major example of a defection by vot-ers was his loss in 1976 of two wards in South Boston where anger over school busing was strong.

Mr. Shamie is convinced that only Kennedy public relations campaigns keep the Massachusetts voters from understanding that their senator does not represent their conservative views. Others think that the voters

House Panel Approves Reagan's Plan For Anti-Castro Station, Radio Marti

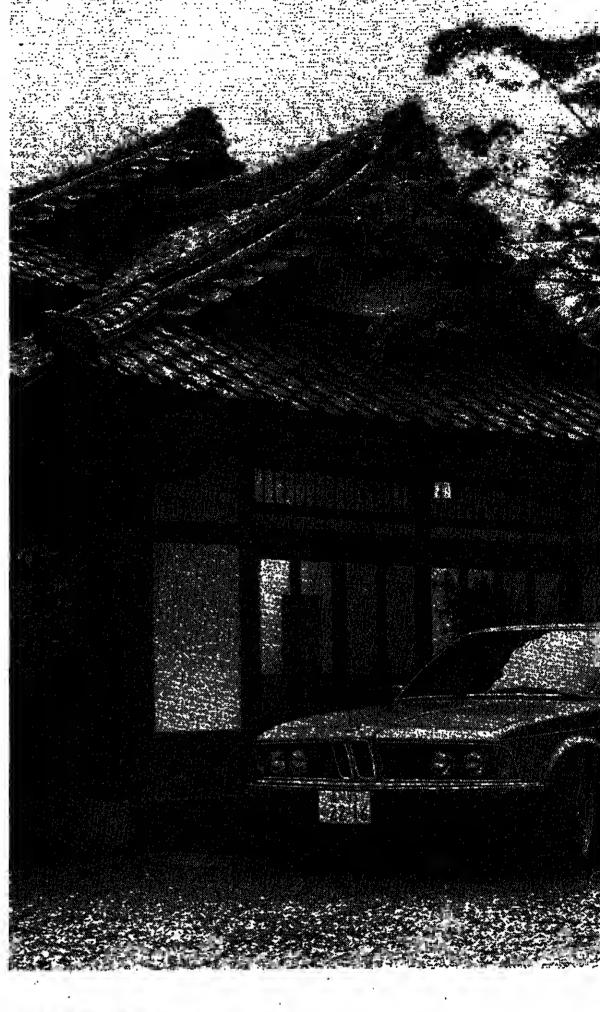

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Over the objections of the U.S. broadcasting industry, the House Energy and Commerce Committee Tuesday approved the Reagan administration's plan to set up a Spanish-langnage AM radio station in Florida to broadcast "the truth" about Fidel Castro to Cubans. The broadcasting industry has complained that Mr. Castro will try to interfere with Radio Marti's signal by setting up a far more powerful station on the same channel that could wipe out the signals of nearly 200 radio stations across the country.

A majority of the panel said that was unlikely because, in the pro-

The Increasing number of mass-produced, standardised cars leads inevitably to greater uniformity on our roads. However, this trend also creates an opposing desire for greater Individuality. And this in turn Improves the sales oppor-

And in 1981 we became the first western car manufacturer to establish its own wholly independent, subsidiary company in Japan.

So in the future BMW's position as one of the unmistakable alternatives will be even further strengthened in this market. 1981 was another good year for BMW. 1981 broke all previous records for the production and sales of BMW cars. With 349.000 units, sales were up a full 3% over the previous year. Exports increased by 6%. Motorcycle sales also rose by 11% to 32.500 units. Prospects look promising. Future developments show every sign of following the same pattern. And BMW will continue to implement its? long-term investment program to consolidate and secure the future of the company. The fact that our capital investment is significantly higher than the industry average reflects the confidence we derive from the quality of our products, our on-going development projects, and the position we have achieved in the worldwide market.

The main thrust of our investment program is concentrated on the development of new products, new production processes, and on the continuous improvement of all operations.

The theme throughout will be the consistent and comprehensive application of the most modern and advanced technologies available.

ARTS/LEISURE

Montreux: Some Jazz And Milton Nascimento

By Michael Zwerin

Montreux, Switzerland — The Montreux International Jazz Festival opened last weekend with three successive houses sold out. Nine groups performed, only one of which played jazz. The festival's director Claude

Nobs defends his programming. "I put rock, reggae and Brazilian music at the front of the festival because I find that quite a few young people stay for another show. You bring them in, they discover some other, less commercial, music. For example they might come for Jackson Browne (July 18) and stay over to hear Dizzy Gillespie the following night."

Whatever the philosophy, it's not a "jazz" festival and it continues through July 25 with 10 university big bands as well as Rickie Lee Jones (July 16), Mose Allison (July 21), B.B. King (July 22), finishing with a gala Detroit night featuring the Modern Jazz Quartet.

First last Friday there was the Steve Miller Band with finely tooled, sunny Californian rock that was big in the 1970s but meant nothing to the Talking Head fans who had come expecting some newer waves. Miller was hissed. The night never recovered. The earlier negativity seemed to jinx the Talking Heads, who never really got started.

Sunday opened with Oriental Wind, which plays fiery poly-rhythmical Turkish jazz filtered through the snows of Sweden, where its leader Okay Temiz now lives. They were more nr less tolerated, both by the public and the festival staff.

Temiz was followed by Gilberto Gil, a talented Brazilian singer who now plays rampantly commercial Brazilian disco and seems intent on proving that even Brazili-ans can play bad music. The audi-ence loved it. Finishing the night, Jimmy Cliff, the reggae star who calls himself a "prophet," played some Jamaican folk music that sounded as though it was being true to itself, if a bit predictable.

poser (who has a role in Werner Herzog's film "Fitzcarraido") was born in the interior province of Minas Gerais, an area that was literally mined out by colonialism. He is black and an orphan and he sings of his origins with a sort of cry of honey. His music manages to be sad and hopeful at the same

He started his career as a crooner and bassist in cabarets. His music is a mixture of working songs, African sounds, Beatles and azz time (he has recorded with jazz saxophonist Wayne Shorter). He sings of friendship, time pass-ing and the basic sensations of life.

He is regal onstage on a stool, at home singing the upper partials of the chords, with hands flying over the strings of his guitar. He does not move or dance and rarely smiles. Yet little by little you feel power building (he is like a jazz musician in this respect) and his music takes over without need of show-business shenanigans. He had the audience stamping shouting and dancing and the confetti was flying.

Until now his audience has been mainly intellectuals and students, although his influence on other musicians has been enormous. Just as Nascimento is musically the son of Joan Gilberto, most younger Brazilian singers are his sons. They sing his songs (he writes only the music) and he has become rich on the royalties but has not yet crossed over to the mass audience as performer. His latest LP sold 300,000 copies in Brazil, however, and the industry is predicting that this will be his year.

In halting English, he explained the delay: "I think it was the fault of the radio and the record companies. People cannot know me if they cannot bear me. And yet at same time I go to small towns and make concerts and there are never less than 5,000 people. And they all sing with me like last night. They say that people will not understand my music, but it's a lie. Because I am people too."

As a kid, with Wagner Tiso, still his pianist and an accomplished instrumentalist in his own right, he would listen to Bossa Nova on the radio. "Someone wrote down the melody and someone else wrote down the lyrics as fast as we could . . . We had to create the harmony." In Rio, later, the other musicians couldn't understand what he was doing. "Everybody said, 'It's different but it's good. Okay, let's play it his way.' '

London Joys: 'Beggar's Opera' and 'All's Well'

their place there are a wealth of smaller-part players joined by Paul Jenes as an unusually dour Scottish Macheath, mercifully lightyears removed from the swashbuckling Laurence Olivier of Peter Brook's first film. And the result of this B-team promotion is that a lot of people underused in "Guys and Dolls," not least the amazing Imeida Staunton (who manages to play Lucy Lockit like Bette Midler imitating Judy Holliday, no mean achievement) come into their own

Clues to Richard Eyre's thinking about "The Beggar's Opera" are neatly contained within Adrian Mitchell's compilation of program notes, which set up John Gay's lyrical grab-bag (songs are pirated from Handel to "Greensleeves") as the first-ever musical, and also subtly move it forward a century into the era of Dickens and Mayhew. That means two solid Stratford East traditions going for it already: the plundering of songs and a devotion to Victoriana. With an intelligent play-within-a-play framework — the whole story of their and betrayal and bigamy is set in a doss house where the inmates are performing for the edification of top-hatted gentry - and John Gunter's cavernous, timbered setting, it adds up to a production of smoky. Hogarthian detail. But Eyre's real achievement has been to steer this "Beggar's Opera" away ant only from the frills of the Edwardian Lyric tradition but also from the Brecht-Weill variant as well. This is no more a Brechtian production than Eyre's main-stage Guys and Dolls" - it simply allows the songs to arise naturally from the dialogue, gives them their due but no more, and then allows the plot to continue on its cynical. downbeat way. In a strong cast, Harry Towb and David Ryall manage a wonderful double-act as the two corrupt father figures, and Irlin Hall is a mountainous Mrs.

Like the late Tyrone Guthrie in his 1959 Stratford revival, Nunn also assumes that "All's Well" needs a considerable amount of stage help: which leaves the production somewhere between .Cherry Orchard" and "Oh What a Lovely War!" and filled with star turns, not least Cheryl Campbell playing Diana as a World War 1 cafe chanteuse and Stephen Moore as the Parolles against which all others in our lifetime will have to be measured - a marvelous mix of braggart and tragic buffoon whose subplot unexpectedly takes over and controls the whole of the second half of the evening. The House resolution gives the committee the power to issue subpoenas and compel testi-mony under oath. If the panel turns up any violations of House rules, it can recommend that a

U.S. to Place New Curbs on Student Visas

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Abuse of the visa program for foreign stu-dents has prompted the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service to announce its intention to impose blanket recertification on bundreds of schools among a large set of new rules.

Speaking for the agency, Janet Graham said Tuesday that the abuses include violations of re-strictions by the students, estimated to number up to 350,000, and the improper issuance of official forms by the schools.

The proposed new rules, published along with the recertifica-tion proposal in the Federal Regis-ter last May 28, would place more responsibility for keeping track of foreign students on the schools.

Among other things, schools would report each new foreign student and give the agency access to the student's files.

During the hostage crisis in 1979, public attention was focused on Iranian students who staged noisy anti-U.S. demonstrations. This prompted President Jinmy Carter to order a crackdown on Iranian students who were not abiding by the visas that allowed them to study in the United States.

The immigration agency announced plans as early as 1980 to draft rules that would impose more control on foreign students.
Recertification of all schools admitting foreign students would not be started until the agency begins enforcing the entire new set of rules. A time schedule was not another than the schedule was not another th

Will Belgian Austerity Bring On Prosperity?

By Axel Krause

laugustional Herold Tribune

RUSSELS — Shortly after Belgian Premier

Wilfried Martens announced his economic susterity program last February, profest strikes, empted in depressed industrial areas and minurdistrely triggered widespread fears of its failure in banking and business circles. The measures announced by Mr. Martens who is operating with special powers granted by the parliament through the year's end, de-yahed the Reignan franc by 8.5 percent, severe-ly cut payments to workers under the nation's tonisoversial wage indensition system and froze consumer prices while providing tax incentives for business investment.

There is now sydespread agreement among business, building and minon leaders that Mr.

Martens, program backed by his center-right chalition is beginning to take hold on the small nation's recessionary economy. How-ever, the leaders into viewed last week also are debating whether or not the program will ever succeed in caring what a leading industrialist termed "le mal Belge — our version of Enrope's crisis, only worse."

Like its neighbors, Belgium has not yet dented growing memployment, shiggish growth or soaring deficits, not has it aftracted substantial new investment. Indeed, the Belgian economy is performing very poorly compared to most other industrial nations, notably in reducing

Last week, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development predicted Belginn's jobless rate next year would rise to 13 percent, the highest unemployment level among major industrialized nations.

"Belgium still is not in good shape, but they have taken our advice and of others to reform - now there is some light at the end of the tunnel," said Etienne Davignon, commissioner for industry and energy in the European Economic Community.

Austerity Urged

Mr. Davignon, who is Belgian, noted that the EEC and other international bodies have. regularly neged Belgium to adopt austerity measures; mchiding substantial cuts in the government's chronically high budget deficits, which in 1982 will average roughly 13 percent of Belgium's gross national product compared with rates averaging less than 5 percent in France, West Germany and the United States.

"We are not extremists in our approach to austerity, since the goal is recovery, investment and political stability," Mr. Martens said. He likened his approach to similar austerity programs of West Germany and Britain. The 46-year-old leader, who has headed five of six coalition governments since 1979, said the challenge in making his program work successfully is the greatest in his career.

"If we do not succeed, the risks to our stability will be greater," Mr. Martens said, referring to widespread fears that if the government fails to promote recovery, leftist unions currently going along with the government will again launch protest strikes, which could paralyze the economy.

"Like Germany and unlike France, we have the unions with us — for the time being," Mr. Martens said.

Continuing Tensions

Also hanging over Belgium's future are continuing tensions - but no immediate crisis caused by the split between the Dutch-speaking region of Flanders and the French-speak-ing region of Wallonia. Respectively, they account for 56 percent and 32 percent of the nation's 9.8 million inhabitants. Those remaining live mainly in bilingual Brussels, which has a French-speaking majority but is situated in the Dutch-speaking area.

"The No. 1 headache in this country is the economy — right now it is in horrible shape and everything here stems from that fact," said the senior executive of a leading U.S. multinational based in Brussels, who declined to be

"It is difficult to predict if Belgium will split into its two historical parts, and pressures could also build on that issue if Martens fails, but he seems to have his act together and there are some hopeful signs," the executive added. Some of the signs noted by Belgian leaders and outside experts include:

Falling wages, averaging 4.5 percent na-tionwide, caused primarily by cuts in the sub-stantial benefits paid under the indexation system. The cuts will remain in force until Dec.

· Rising productivity, with a gain estimated by some leading Belgian bankers to approach 5 percent this year compared to around 3 per-cent for most other EEC countries.

 Expanding exports, which next year should help reduce Belgium's chronic currentaccount deficit to 3 percent of its gross national product from the current level of just over 6 percent, according to the OECD.

 Gradually rising industrial production, which began late last year and is expected to average a 2.5-percent gain this year, nearly doubling during 1983.

 Willingness by leading U.S. and Japanese banks to underwrite $1.2 billion in seven-year credits to Belgium, half of which were arranged by Finance Minister Willy de Clercq during a U.S. visit last month.

Citing what he termed a "radical change of the psychological climate in Belgium," Mr. de Clercq told U.S. bankers and businessmen in Los Angeles and San Francisco that "confidence has been restored and this will, more than anything else, contribute to the economic Although business leaders in Belgium generally agree with that assessment, some grumble that Mr. Martens' program does not go far enough, "For companies, the measures go in the right direction. Not as far as we would have liked, but it was a good step ... the economic recovery of Belgium is under way," said Daniel Janssen, president of the Belgian employers' association, which groups 60,000 of the nation's businesses and banks.

Seeking Commitment

Mr. Janssen and other business leaders are seeking continuing commitment by unions to restrained wages and adherence by the government to promises of reduced public spending. They also want to reverse the continuing decline of private investment in Belgium, which is expected to average around 15 percent in volume this year,

None of these problems will be solved easily or soon, Belgian feaders agree.

"The only significant spending by Belgians here is being done by the government, since confidence for investment has not yet been established," said the president of one of Belgi-um's leading banks. "Lots of capital has, however, left this country for the United States and Asia Perhaps with confidence restored, some of it will return."

Budget Cuts

Meanwhile, the Martens government is working on a draft 1983 budget, whose deficit they are determined to cut to around 10 perceni of the gross national product, said René Maldague, head of the government's planning agency. Mainly, this will be done by cutting government spending, including subsidies and other forms of aid to industry that last year came 10 10 percent of the 1.4-trillion-franc (about $30 billion) budget.

"The unique problem we have is that the state debts have been cumulative and the growing plus high interest rates create a continuing heavy burden," added a senior Finance Ministry official, emphasizing that interest and unemployment payments are the two fastestgrowing items in the budget.

Complicating the budget cuts, government planners said, is that the nationalized Belgian railroad and several local tramway companies. for example, recently announced that they could not longer pay suppliers, probably meaning additional federal subsidies.

The planners said that they will use the occasion to force more cost enting, including wages. "We recently forced through wage cuts at Sabena [Belgian World Airlines] of around 17 percent. We must make more savings of this kind elsewhere, since we cannot afford bailouts any longer," the Finance Ministry of-

Union leaders in Belgium are not exactly eu-phoric about Mr. Martens' program, but they appear conciliatory. "I wished another polincal party had put through this program, but a majority of our members have accepted it, these sacrifices," said Jef Houthuys, president of the Confederation of Christian Labor Unions, the nation's largest with 1.3 million

The Socialist General Federation of Belgian Workers, representing a million workers, is considerably more hostile to the government, but is going along with the program.

"We need greater competitiveness and budget cuts, so we went along with the program, but we also have our conditions," Mr. Honthuys said, emphasizing that he is counting on some form of re-establishment of wage indexing after the year's end. 🕐

Labor negotiations are scheduled for September, he said, adding that he also will press the government for what he termed a more equitable income tax system and greater government emphasis on fighting Belgium's growing unemployment.

During last week's interview, Mr. Martens appeared calm and confident about the future, which includes nationwide municipal elections

"We have an opportunity to provide leadership and we expect to continue pursuing it for another four years," said the Belgian leader in an obvious reference to Belgium's next legislarive elections in 1985.

Arriving by train from Brussels, a visitor notes rusting, abandoned plants, particularly in the metallurgical sector. In the office of the Confederation of Christian Labor Unions, Belgium's leading labor group, several parallel lines of roughly a dozen unemployed workers form for benefit checks. Yet despite such signs of economic crisis, Charleroi's workers and the area's economy are protected by continuing, heavy government subsidies. These include assistance for Cockerill Sambre, the nation's largest steel company and one of the largest employers in the area, whose losses were more than 17 billion Belgian francs (about $350 million) last

"We are going through a bad period, but we are not condemned to disappear," said François Cammarata, secretary of the Confederation of Christian Labor Unions' metallurgical branch here, while pointing to buildozers clearing an area at Cockerill's large steel plant on the city's outskirts.

plants in Europe and we intend to export - including to you in America," Mr. Debaise

The Cockerill group, in which the Belgian government took a controlling interest last year, is among the West European companies being singled out by the U.S. Commerce Department for allegedly dumping steel in the U.S. market. If the dispute is not resolved by next month, countervailing duties imposed by Washington could prove extremely damaging to the companies, Belgian government officials have warned.

We used to have 65 coal mines here in 1955; today we are down to one and it will be closed down starting next year. We import our coal from Poland and the United States," said Mr. Cammarata, adding "our situation here is symbolic of the European crisis." Indeed, Chareleroi typifies growing deindustrialization of key areas in northern Europe. "Unlike our neighbors, Holland and Germany, our traditional industries are not growing, said René Maldague, head of the Belgian state planning agency, noting that the government is attempting to encourage development of new, high-technology industries.

Charleroi is in French-speaking Wallonia. Since the 1960s, much of the new investment has been attracted to the Dutch-speaking regions of Flanders, notably Antwerp, but even there it is minimal.

One Nervous Girl's Testimony in 1924 Is Recalled by Uproar Over Hinckley arm." She said something to him. A bailiff

By Meg Greenfield Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — I have before me photostats of the front pages of a couple of newspapers, The New York Times and The New York Herald Tribune for Aug. 8, 1924. The story that engages my attention concerns the Loeb-Leopold murder case, then in court.

In the Herald Tribune it is headlined this way: "Girl Friend Swears Loeb Was Childish." Lorraine Nathan, 18, and 4 Boy Chums Corroborate Alienists on Conditions of Minds of Murderers." The Times headline tells more: "State Accuses Girl of Lying for Loeb; Four Chums Testify. Crowe Cries 'Perjury' as Former Sweetheart Declares Youth Trrational and Infantile." On the inside page where the story continues, one of the papers carries a photograph of the girl, of whom it says, "She made a pretty though somewhat nervous picture on

The girl is wearing one of those daffy headache bands of the period, and she looks very young to me. She is my mother.

I never discussed her role as a defense witness in the Loeb-Leopold case with my mother. She died when I was a child, and it was only years later that my brother and I, growing up in another city, even heard of the famed Chicago murder (someone had made a movie about it) and their heard, from a family friend, to our astomishment, that our mother. bad had some part in the court proceedings.

Tight Wall of Shame

But the tight wall of shame that surrounded the whole affair, from murder to sentencing. remained so strong among those associated with it - no matter how tangentially - that even then we were minble to get answers to the questions we put to our elder relatives. Why bring all that up now?" came the stock response. "Why do you want to talk about it?

I don't really remember... It was so long ago." Eventually we went to the microfilm section of a library and dug the story out of old

The uprost over the case of John W. Hinckley Jr., who was found not guilty by reason of insanity in the shooting of President Reagan, has caused me to retrieve those photostats from a drawer, inspect them again and consider again some of the aspects of that earlier case that, in slightly different form, we are arguing about now.

True, the two rich Chicago boys — Nathan Leopold Ir., 19, and Richard Loeb, 18 — who plotted and carried out the murder of young Bobby Franks in a spirit of cold-blooded intellectual play, pleaded guilty to the crime, at the recommendation of their lawyer, Clarence Darrow. So there was nothing precisely com-parable to the Hinckley lawyers' effort to per-suade a jury that a defendant was not guilty by reason of insanity. And in fact there wasn't even a jury, once the guilty plea had been en-

It was for the sentencing judge, John R.
Caverly, and with the hope of getting the death penalty mitigated in favor of life imprisonment, that Darrow organized his psychiatric pitch. This pitch was that despite the obviously rational calculation and control that had gone into the perpetration of the crime, the "boys," as Darrow called his clients, though not "in-saine," weren't quite right in the mind at the time they committed it. Rather, they had been driven to their act by an accumulation of psy-chological and emotional deformities not of their own making.

My mother, who described herself on the stand as "just a school-day friend" of Loeb, was one of the witnesses Darrow called to help establish this point. Darrow, in his wisdom, declined to call her younger sister, my beloved Aun't Rolly — then described as "Miss Rosalind" - notwithstanding, as we learn from both The Times and the Trib, that Miss Rosalind stood ready with a medical finding that Loeb was "plain cuckoo." Her sister's diagnosis, it is explained by my friends were far from being Darrow's heavy guns. They followed, they did not lead - and they followed the doctors. The Loeb-Leopold court proceedings turned into a sort of small convention of psychiatrists (or alienists, as those who testified in court were still called). It was a landmark event in American legal history. The prosecution came in with a group of highly respected specialists in nervous disorders. Darrow countered with a distinguished group of the new-fangled Freudians, including one who was president of the American Psychiatric Association and superintendant of St. Elizabeths Hospital, a federal mental hospital in Washington.

(Two Chicago newspapers, nothing loathe to get into the act, invited Sigmund Freud to do an analysis of the murderers for them. Freud sent his regrets.) There were soon complaints, as there were to be in the Hinckley case almost 60 years lat-er, that the wealthy families of these young men were, in effect, "buying" them out of the consequences of their crime with an ability to pay for expert testimony and counsel. There was unprecedented courtroom discussion of overbearing governesses, childhood sexual fan-tasies, glandular disorders. And there was despair then, as now, that respected experts could argue such utterly different versions of the psychiatric case.

I can't tell from the news accounts whether my mother actually perjured herself as the prosecutor, Robert Crowe, charged. He pointed out that her testimony that Loeb's conduct had changed and that in the last year he had seemed newly "infantile" and "irrational" directly contradicted earlier sworn statements she had made in the prosecutor's office that Locb was "manly" and "sane." There was a quarrel among lawyers over that, some maneuvering, a countercharge that in that ear-lier session an assistant state's attorney had tried to influence her testimony and that parts of her testimony had been deleted and so I don't know what to make of any of that; the court evidently didn't pursue it. And I can't know how closely her own genume perception of Loeb's condition paralleled that of the three leading psychoanalysts the defense had already called. She certainly used all their terminology, and it has an odd, forced, unacconstanted sing to it in the name account. The customed ring to it in the news account. The prosecutor responded, in a savage cross-exami-nation, by addressing her sarcastically as "doc-

It must have been terrifying. That's the part that interests me. But I have very little to guide me in understanding how she felt, or even why she was there. She was not, incidentally, the 'sweetheart" of the moment or the one who was written about in the semifictional accounts. She was a friend who had known him long, had once been a girl friend and now re-mained close.

An Unwanted Celebrity

I do know now from family that she insisted on testifying when asked, very much against the will and judgment of her parents. They wanted to avoid any connection with the terrible scandal and foresaw what it would be like — not just on the stand, but after. My mother gained an unwanted celebrity. Along with others who followed the trial's revelations, she learned of a breathtakingly brutal, degenerate side to her friend. She was to suffer something that sounds today like a nervous breakdown when the case was completed and to be packed off "to forget" at a kind of junior college-finishing school in the East.

I try to imagine the horror, the impact the murder itself must have had on her, a very young kind of 18-year-old, strictly brought up, "sheltered" (as they used to say), fond of this boy, thinking she knew him well. He had wantonly murdered an innocent child. She was not much beyond being an innocent child herself - the scrapbook memorabilia of hers that I have from the general period, none of it mentioning this, is the buoyant, silly, enthusiastic stuff of schoolgirls. The news accounts give me some clue to the ambivalence and anguish of her feelings. They tell me that throughout the time she was on the stand Loeb never took his eyes off her -and craned his neck for a look at his former sweet-pulled him away. To me this moment has it all - innocence and experience, revulsion and compassion, incredulity and understanding. We were in the babyhood of our experience with this particular kind of analysis of criminal behavior. I go back to the case of the poked-in choco-Chocolate Episode

In a way, as usual in our family, Aunt Rolly was out there ahead of the curve. For her the chocolate-squashing represented a lapse in decorum so grave as to constitute, on its face, ty. In fact, the p judge was to make a comparable observation: "Had they [Loeb and Leopold] been normal, they would not have committed this crime." Although his eventual decision to waive the death penalty was not, he claimed, based on the psychiatric case, but rather on the youth of the defendants, Judge Caverly here gave expression to a sentiment — crime equals derangement — that, whatever its merit in some instances, has been overextended, de-based and reduced to absurdity in our own

And surely the same may also be said of the other novelty of the case: the introduction of all this lore about the defendants' upbringing and state of mind, not as evidence of insanity or of an inability to know right from wrong, but rather as evidence of a diminished responsibility for their actions, which in turn argued for a sentence of diminished severity. Since those early days, it seems to me, this search for determining causes, this assumption of "no fault" behavior has been carried to a mad place, too. Increasingly, even mindlessly, we have overlaid all our actions with a vaguely psychological, exculpatory, morally confusing wash. Nowadays there is not even "temptation." We call temptation "pressure," the implication being that the crime or lapse is hardly the fault of the one who succumbs; it is the fault of the temptation itself, the fault of the

And we have so vastly expanded the appli-cation of this doctrine since Darrow's day that the act of corruption or cynicism has yet to be invented that does not somehow get mitigated by it. I sometimes think we may even be tending, in our judgments of public venality, toward a new verdict of "not greedy by reason

The woman who was my mother was pretty old-fashioned and rigorous. Reflecting on what I know of her — remember and have been told — I think she would in fact have been shocked by where that pioneering legal case helped to bring us. But that is speculation, and I am interested in the girl. I look at the news photo of the young face, the earnest eyes, the damned-fool headband. What did she beheve? That Loeb was evil? That he was mad? How hurt, how betrayed, how shocked was

Did she finally decide that she must do what she could to save his life? Was that the moral and emotional nub of the matter for her, an unwillingness not to help save him, an inability to refuse to testify? Was she repelled by him? Moved by his plight? Both? Did it add up to some dim faith in the psychiatric theory before the court, to a need to believe that this old and measured "school-day friend" had been in some way possessed - and thus not fully responsible for his barbarous act?

You will see I am myself working toward a theory of what motivated her. I sense in her decision to testify - I want to sense in it - an element of humility, compassion. Never mind the overreaching and the intellectual arrogance of some of those who claim power these days to explain every human act of love and grace, not just of depredation, as nothing more than the automatic working of some psychological law they understand. There is humility, not arrogance, in yielding to the possibility and accepting the thought that others are driven by devils we cannot see and might not ourselves resist. I like to think that some largeness of spirit and understanding is what motivated the neryous girl they ridiculed as "doctor" on the stand, that, painful as it was, she was acting instinctively, intuitively in the spirit we need to retain today — no matter where our much-needed discussion and revision of the criminal

The 'Gondolier' Bag: Elegant, Safe And Small Enough to Deter Thieves

By Monique Davidson

DARIS — The other day, a woman was strolling down the boulevards, I clutching a big package while her shoulder bag was hanging down her back. A few yards behind her, two young men, stalking silently along on rubber soles, were approaching rapidly. They would have easily succeeded in snatching her bag if at that moment the piercing voice of an onlooker had oot rent the air, warning her to watch out.

The grateful woman quickly brought her bag around in front, clasping it to her stomach. Meanwhile, the bag-hunters raced off to more profitable fields.

It goes to show that today Paris is just as unsafe as New York, London or Rome, and you must watch out for your bag. The younger generation seems to have found the answer in the so-called gondolier bag, which first came out as a disco fashion. It is just big enough for a Kleenex, a few cigarettes, a little money and a bunch of keys, and it is worn hanging down in front, rather like a Scottish sporran. It is the latest version of the shoulder bag, another fashion with a practical idea behind it. When it first appeared in the 1920s, it came in when the new short, shim skirts made pockets impossible. Launched by Coco Chanel, it was popularized by Schiaparelli during World War II.

Its most popular version was a conductor's satchel, slung over the shoulder when bicycling in town.

Most bag shops in town report that sales of goodolier bags have jumped in the last few months. At Celine's, a store with classic good aste, the success of the bag has been spectacular. His popular mother clearly has a mind of her own, and everything she does is avidly copied — from her hairdo to her love for Edwardi-an jewelry. To make things more interest-ing, Lady Di, with her unique combination of regal and real, is hard to predict. She has already created waves by refusing to pick a murse from the conventional Norland Nannies or Kensington Nannies (where she herself was enlisted be-fore working at Pimlico's kindergarten.) Her choice fell on Barbara Barnes, 39, a forest worker's daughter who will not wear a uniform and will be known by her

Miss Barnes, who was Lady Anne Tennant's governess for 14 years, told the press she sees no different problems in bringing up a royal baby. "I treat all children as individuals," she said. "I am not a graduate of any sort of namey's knowledge from many years of ex-perience with children."

Dressing Code

How will the royal baby be dressed? Rompers or smocks? Curls or crew cut? Where did his layette come from? What are the princess's favorite colors? Is there any special dressing code for little princes? Any special colors?

From Buckingham Palace, the word comes that, no, there is no special dressing code for royal children. The only convention that Lady Di will have to respect is the use of the christening robe, which dates back to Queen Victoria.

Made of white silk and Honiton lace, lined with white satin, it was first worn by the Prince of Wales, later Edward VII, in 1842. Queen Victoria then gave the robe to the Victoria then gave the robe to the Duchess of York, later Queen Mary, all of whose children were christened in it, too.

No Radical Changes

There will be no radical changes as far as dressing is concerned, the spokesman for Buckingham Palace said. But there will be as far as education is concerned, he added, without elaborating, Lady Di has already chosen her baby's layette — right at Buckingham Palace, might at Buckingham Palace, where tons of gifts, both clothes and soft toys, arrived from all over the world, including Scandinavia, Australia and America, according to the spokesman. What Lady Didoes not pick will go to charities. Generally speaking, they are small things sent by all levels of society, the spokesman said, adding firmly that gifts are not being accepted. that gifts are not being accepted from commercial firms.

Do we know whether Lady Di knew the sex of her child in advance and was able to decide between baby blue or baby pink? "She may have had a scan," said the spokesman, "but it is a matter that is not on public record." "That may emerge when the

Although the Buckingham Palace spokesman said that there is no special code for royal children, experts point out that there is, indeed, a code, although not an official one, the rules of which can be traced to Queen Mary. The formu-la goes for all aristocratic children and boils down to pale colors, natural fabrics, smock dresses for lit-tle girls, gray flannel or corduroy sborts for little boys, worn with a Viyella (a mixture of wool and cotton) shirt and suspenders. When the children go out, they wear double-breasted tweed overcoats with velvet colors, in one of two colors -navy blue or bottle green.

Curis? That's up to the mother. Little princes tend to wear neat little haircuts from special places like Harrod's. Shoes, though, are extremely specific and start with the sensible laced-up kind (to hold the ankles) and run to T-strap sandals with white or gray socks. No jewel-

Bayer's Agfa: An Industrial Focus

By Axel Krause

MORTSEL, Belgium - Executives of Agfa-Gevaert, a West German-controlled photographic company, bristle when they are compared with Eastman Kodak of the United States, their main competitor in Western Europe.

"We definitely are not the Kodak of Europe there are separate fields in which each of us are leading," said André Leysen, Agfa's president, in an interview at company beadquarters here, just outside Antwerp.

Mr. Leysen, a former newspaper publisher who took over the Agfa position in 1979, emphasized that while Kodak dominates the world market for amateur-oriented cameras, film and related business, such sales account for only 33 percent of Agfa's total.
In 1981, Agfa's sales rose 15 percent from the year earlier to just over 5 billion Deutsche marks ($2.01 billion), while pretax earnings fell sharply to 32,2 millioo DM.

The largest and fastest-growing share of Agfa's business — 44 percent of the total — is coming from sales of industrial photographic equipment, ranging from graphical systems for the printing industry to professional audio and video magnetic tapes for radio and television stations.

"The came of our business is something we call image registration and processing," said Mr. Leysen, a Belgian who is a graduate of the Harvard Business School.

He said Agfa ranks first in worldwide sales of industrial graphic equipment, a $900-million-ayear market, and first in Europe for the sales of Xray materials, such as films and foil for use in the medical, space and construction fields. "We are very determined to expand in these areas," Mr.

Leysen said.

W. Germany Approves AEG Credit Guarantees

BONN - The West German Cabinet Wednesday came to the aid of AEG-Telefunken by approving a export credit guarantees totaling 600 million Deutsche marks ($240 million). Economics Minister Ottn Graf Lambsdorff

"They will only get the guarantee certificates when the banks' money is there," Mr. Lambsdorff

He said the extra cash created by this decision, including the banks' contribution, would probably tide AEG over until about the end of this year.

He said the government main-tains its belief that a restructuring of the company is essential and that all concerned in labor and management must be prepared in "Time is pressing," he said.

Mr. Lambsdorff said Cabinet approval of the decision to provide export guarantees was based oo a desire to protect the reputation of West German export industry and in safeguard medium-sized supplier companies from the conse-quences of a collapse.

He said Wednesday's decision did not prejudice the question of longer-term support for a restructuring program for AEG, but he reaffirmed there was no question of the government taking a direct or indirect stake in the firm.

He said the government guarantees were conditional on approval by the EEC. The export contracts covered by the guarantees would be approved individually by govexports outside the community. Mr. Lambsdorff said the guarantees would cover AEG's contracts for the proposed pipeline to bring natural gas from Siberia to Western Europe. AEG is to build 47 compressor stations worth 700 million DM for the project. Financial analysts in Frankfurt

Renewed Fighting Between Iran and Iraq Puts Oil Exports in Doubt

By Nicholas. Moore

LONDON - Iran's offensive into Iraq sent tremors through the oil industry Wednesday, and company analysts said the supply outlook from the region has seldom been harder to predict.

Aside from short-term uncertainty posed by the lighting, an Iranian victory and an early end to the war might lead both combatants to boost sales and renew the recent glut. But, conversely, a triumphant Iran might impose its hawkish oil policies on other Gulf states, curbing supply to boost world prices, they said. In the present over-supplied

Banking sources said Tuesday that the authorities were also trying to find out whether some borrowers, in seeking loans or guarantees from the bank, had provided Penn Square with false information.

In another development Tuesday, the Federal Deposit Insur-ance Corp. announced that uninsured deposits in Penn Square totaled $250 million, or $60 million more than its preliminary estimate. Deposits are insured by the FDIC up to $100,000 each. Most of the larger, uninsured deposits at Penn Square were held by other financial institutions, mainly credit

At the Chase Manhattan Bank, which had purchased about $250 million in loan participations from Penn Square, banking sources said Chase's internal investigation appeared to center on the institutional banking division, the same group that earlier this year was responsible for a pretax loss of about $270 million as a result of dealing with a small securities concern Drysdale Government Securities.

WASHINGTON — The demand for international satellite circuits will soar by an estimated 85 percent over the next four years, according to the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization.

Intelsat, upon closing out its annual global traffic meeting here earlier this week, said its survey of member nations had produced a new projection of demand for 62,225 satellite telephone circuits by the end of 1986, compared to the 33,556 circuits expected to be in use by the end of this year. These projections do not include the satellite circuits used for domestic communication within the United States.

The organization is the 106-member group that owns and operates the global satellite system used by countries throughout the world for international or domestic communications.

It handles about two-thirds of overseas telecommunications services and virtually all overseas television transmissions, the remainder being generally processed by undersea cables.

The results of the annual global traffic meetings are closely followed as a prime indicator of satellite traffic growth, because both Intelsat's members and other nations that contract for service attend the gatherings to provide their latest demand forecasts.

According to spokesman Gavin Trevitt, this year's meeting attracted more than 260 representatives from 116 countries. A compilation of their traffic requirements showed the demand for circuits in the Atlantic Ocean region will almost double from 3,900 to 40,000 circuits. Demand in the Pacific Ocean region will almost double from 3,900 to 7,600 circuits, and demand in the Indian Ocean region should climb from 7,600 to 14,500 circuits. Intelsat is using 10 satellites to provide global service, with six serving the Atlantic region, two serving the Pacific basin and two serving the Indian Ocean region.

DICTATORSHIPS AND DOUBLE STANDARDS: Rationalism and Reason in Politics

By Jeane J. Kirkpatrick. 270 pp. $14.95. Simon & Schuster, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

SHE HAS been labeled a neocon-servative as well as a formulator of the shocking (to liberals) notion that friendly dictatorships are better than unfriendly ones. And indeed this volume of essays by Jeane J. Kirkpa-trick, "Dictatorships and Double Standards," takes its name from and leads off with the essay that first articulated her value-scale of autocracies when it appeared in Commentary.

But this collection reveals Kirkpa-

But this collection reveals Kirkpa-trick as possessing a considerably more complex and interesting mind than any labels can suggest — not to speak of a supple if weighty prose-style that, at its best, draws a reader along by the sheer magnetism of its

It's not simply that she prefers autocracies that are favorably disposed to the United States over autocracies in the Communist orbit. It's that she considers that there is an absolute and qualitative difference between anthoritarian and totalitarian governments — between, say, the Shah's Iran and Somoza's Nicaragua on the one hand, and Castro's Cuba or Pol Pot's "murderous utopia" on the other.

Not the least of these differences, Kirkpatrick points out, is that authoritarian autocracies have been known to evolve into democracies, while to-talitarian ones have not. Why this is so, and why the Carter administration erred in not recognizing as much, is the burden of her subtle analysis in such pieces as "U.S. Security and Lat-in America," "On the Invocation of Universal Values," "Reflections on Totalitarianism," as well as her title

Nor is it strictly accurate to label Kirkpatrick a neoconservative. In "Politics and the New Class," she seems to dismiss the new right along with the left (both old and new) for making the great error of trying "to bring the real into conformity with the ideal (that is, with an idea of reality)." Whether this "New Right" is to be identified with the politics called "neoconservativism" is probably debatable. In any case, her diamissal of Platonic idealism points to what she is truly interested in conserving namely, institutions that embody human habit as opposed to programs of reform based on notions of what people ought to be.

That is why in these essays she favors reasonableness over rationalism, for "the rationalist approach to social thought fails to distinguish between ideas and institutions, between form and substance, between conceiving and realizing." That brings us back to why she prefers authoritarian regimes over totalitarian ones, especially in Latin America; why she calls for a foreign policy there that holds American security as its objective rather than "the globalist approach which denies the realities of culture, character, geography, economics and history in favor of a vague, abstract universal ism"; why, turning to domestic poli-tics, she prefers traditional party poli-tics to the new "reform" variety; why she favors welfare state liberalism over what she names "progressive lib-eralism," which, she believes, tends to promote equality at the expense of liberty, and, finally, why she sides with the authors of the U.S. Constitution and the Federalist Papers, who believed in human fallibility, as opposed to thinkers like Plato and Rousseau, who believed in human perfectibility.

Actually, what Kirkpatrick classi-fies herself as politically is somewhat paradoxical. In "Politics and the New Class," she writes, "Describing the class of which he was part (as I am)," Joseph Schumpeter noted, with more cogency than kindness, 'One of the touches that distinguish intellectuals] from other people who do the same [sort of things] is the absence of direct responsibility for practical affairs. This touch in general accounts for another — the absence of firsthand knowledge — which only actual experience can give." She concludes the es-say by writing that "a society that cherishes liberty will do well to protect itself from the excesses of the new

Does this mean that we need to be protected from the excesses of Jeane Kirkpatrick? There are those who would complain that because she is asking us to preserve a past that no longer exists, her essays are as useless as the class she admits to being part. of, yet excoriates. There are also those who would contend that she has not quite clinched her case that any program that does not oppose comminism in effect promotes it. But I for one am happy to have these essays: They seem to me, on the whole, to be temperate, well-reasoned and extremely challenging. There are no easy ways to dismiss what she is saying.

SLOW play used to be a serious problem on major bridge occa-sions. In 1962 one French player took almost half an hour to bid and play one deal, which proved a great trial to an opponent with a short attention span. That is far from the record, for in a New York match a single bid once took 25 minutes and the deal took almost one hour.

There is no perfect solution, since it is hard to separate slow play by one partnership from that of their opponents, but the organizers have done much to improve the situation in re-cent years. In team matches a timelimit is imposed, with penalties that usually involve the point-score or disciplinary action. A variation that proved successful in the 1981 world championship was to threaten to bar a partnership from one or more sessions of play. This duly alarmed the snails, and the penalty did not have to be imposed In the 1981 Cavendish Club Invitational Charity Pairs event the players were threatened with heavy matchpoint penalties. As a result they maintained the required rate of play and only one penalty was imposed. However, the time-limit did occasionally have an impact on the performance, as witness the diagramed deal. East and West were two Scottish international experts, Barnet Shenkin and Willie Coyle. Shenkin almost won the tournament a few years ago, losing the lead only in the final deals, while Coyle was making his first visit to these shores. They were using an exotic convention popular in Britain; the Multi Two Diamonds. The opening by East showed either a weak two-immediately and shifted to a club. West would have saved his are as an entry and the defense would have taken, in due course, three club tricks and a diamond as well as the spade ace. But this would have been doubledummy, for East bad no clue to the situation in hearts and clubs. Knowing that South held the king and jack, he ducked, allowing the jack to score. South led the diamond ace followed by the queen, and East correctly ducked. He won the next diamond and "went into the tank," as the saying goes. Five minutes later he was still in his think tank, and he had used up a considerable share of the 24 minutes allowed for three deals. North-

South were muttering and threatening to call the tournament director. Shenkin went on thinking and eventually solved the problem. He led a low club, and Coyle won with the queen in this position:

Now it was Coyle's turn to think. If he had taken his time, he would no doubt have worked out the defense: g shift to a heart South-would have to win and play dis-monds, but the lead of the last dismond from the dummy would squeeze the closed hand. The declarer would have to discard a heart winner, or unguard one of the black suits with fatal results.

But Coyle was very conscious of the clock and embarrassed by the fact that his parmership was taking far more than its share of available time. He quickly returned to a low club, which would have been right at the MONTREAL - The National League proved Tuesday night that it can beat the befuddled American League just as convincingly in Canada as it does back in the United States.

The senior, and superior, circuit won its 11th consecutive All-Star Game, and 19th in the last 20 years, by keeping the American League at hannless arm's length throughout a less-than-scintillating 4-I victory before a crowd of

In the 53d All-Star affair, the first ever played outside the United States, the winners had an appropriately international cast of heroes.

Venezuelan Dave Concepcion got the eventual game-winning hit, two-run homer just inside the left-field foul pole in the second inning, to overcome a 1-0 deficit and make a loser of Dennis Eckersley; Pete Rose added a run-scoring sacrifice fly in the third and Gary Carter an RBI single in the sixth.

For the fourth time in the past five years, the Americans scored first. That, however, was a hard had a big, significant first inning, but settled for a paltry one.

Henderson — perhaps the game's most electric player — hit the second pitch from Rogers on a line over shortstop Concepcion's leap for a single.

After a long Fred Lynn fly-out,
Handerson, with 84 steals in 88 games, was running as George Brett sliced a sharp single to left. Henderson lost the flight of the ball, a common occurrence in the bizarre twilight of Olympic Stadium, and advanced only to second.

Rogers, who has a history of being nervous in the early innings of big games, bounced a wild-pitch curve in the dirt past eatcher Carter, advancing the runners to second and third. It had the look of a long inning. But then the National League got its first break.

Reggie Jackson (20 homers and hot of late) blasted a hall into the left-field stands — foul by a yard at most, Jackson seemed unperturbed and, after fighting off a pair of 3-2 pitches, cracked a deep sacrifice fly to center, scoring Hender-

Brett, on second, was asieep, Particularly frustrating for the American League, which has made cost the Americans a run: Cecil cost the Americans a run: Cecil Cooper hit a chop over the mound for a scratch hit (Rogers broke poorly) that would have scored a man from third. The promising rally fizzled as Carter held Robin Yount's third-strike foul tip. True, the American League had the lead — the fifth straight game in which it had managed to nose ahead at some point. But the feeling of the game was that the Nationals had dodged a bullet. And, crust to swallow. They might have as is their custom, they took advantage quickly.

After crisply retiring the first five hitters, American League starter Eckersley carelessly walked Dale Murphy in the second. Up came Concepcion, part of the sup-posedly punchless half of the National League order. After all, four National regulars — Concepcion, Rose, Manny Trillo and Tim Raines — entered the game with just four homers among them in more than 1,000 at bats.

More National League trickery: On a 1-1 fastball that tailed in on his fists. Concepcion opened his hips and booked a smoking line drive around the left-field foul pole for a two-run home run. Concepcion's first All-Star homer was fair hy as much as Jackson's had been foul. The American League had struggled through 18 minutes and 24 Rogers pitches in the first to scrounge up one run. The Nationals had trumped with a drowsy two-out walk and one home-run swing for a 2-1 lead in

The Nationals added a run in the third off Eckersley, although most of the discredit properly went to Jackson. Jackson had popped up oo the first pitch with a man on to end the top of the inning and, when he hied himself to right field he may have neglected to take along all of his mind.

Leadoff pinch hitter Ruppert Jones of San Diego smashed a long drive to right-center that most major league right fielders would have turned into a smooth, cruising catch on the warning track. turning Carlton Fisk and Andre Thornton inside as he struck out the side. Cariton used smoke to dispatch Fisk and a low, off-speed hook to send Thornton flounder-

Carlton was back at his tormenting ways in the fifth. Henderson led off with a single to right, but seemed paralyzed at first by Carlton's legendary pickoff move. When Willie Wilson slapped a one-hopper back to the mound, Carlton had time to flip the ball from his glove to his hand before starting a double play that easily erased the American League's two fastest men.

The highlight, or lowlight, of the middle innings was the work of 275-pound second-base umpire John McSherry, one of baseball's sizable contingent of sizable umps. With none out in the fifth, pinch runner Steve Sax, a bumptious Dodger rookie, stole second cleanly (replays showed), but McSherry called him out, perhaps fooled by Bobhy Grich's flashy, lightningquick tag.

In the sixth, second baseman while trying to turn an around-thehorn double play (Sax also threw the ball into the National League dugout). McSherry missed the missed tag and made the phantom out call on a hard-sliding Dave Winfield. So instead of men at second and third with one out, the American League had a man on second with two down. When Carl Yastrzemski fanned against the sly Soto, the inning died. The Americans were back with more of their customary midsummer buffoonery in the sixth. Al Oliver greeted Dan Quisenberry with a cheap chop hit over third that Henderson would normally hold to a single. This time, getting his foot snagged in the stadium's inexcusably old and rutted artificial turf, Henderson nearly did a header as the ball dribbled past him for three bases. The play was scored a double and an error.

Oliver scored for a 4-1 lead when Carter's two-out liner to center escaped a rolling, shoe-high at-tempt by fleet Willie Wilson (nor-mally a left fielder) for an RBI sin-

The American League continued its pattern of genuinely laughable in-the-clutch failure as, in the seventh, the National League again invited the perennial losers back into the game, only to have them decline the opportunity again.

Lance Parrish opened with a smoking, 400-foot double off the wall in right-center. After futile Frank White fanned on four pitches, Henderson beat out a high bouncer to Sax for his third hit making him the first player since Yastrzemski in 1971 to get more than two hits in an All-Star Game.

With men on second and third, Wilson and Buddy Bell behaved like true American League All-Stars, putting themselves in the hole hy overanxiously chasing bad offerings from Soto before finally fanning on four pitches each. Wilson looked like he was trying to beat a snake to death as he hacked at a slider down and in. Bell's strikeout put the losers in Leading that talented contingent are Nicklaus and Watson, who cagaged in a dramatic confrontation for the U.S. Open last month, with Watson winning on a chip-in bird-ie on the 71st hole. It would be no surprise if; when the British Open comes down to its last few holes all is a measure of how much things have changed since the assassination three years ago of President Park Chung Hee.

Park refused to permit professional baseball in South Korea. He con-

Presient Chun Don Hwan, who seized power in May, 1980, has neither abandoned those goals nor has he lifted Park's strict political controls. But he has made life in South Korea more relaxed.

Permitting professional baseball is just one of the steps he has taken (he has also abolished a midnight-to-4 a.m. curiew that was in effect for

A Small Military Step

WASHINGTON — When Neil Armstrong landed on the lunar surface many moons ago and said, "One small step for a man; one giant leap for mankind," I'll have to admit I was worried. I couldn't believe that the United States would invest all that brainpower and money just to find out what made the universe tick. I recall turning to my wife, or somebody like her, and saying There's got to be a military divi-dend in all this." My wife, or whoever it was, is a romantic by na- Buchwald ture. "Why does there always have to be a military dividend in everything?" she demanded. "Why can't we use scientific achievements for peace instead of war?" "We could if they would," I told her. "There is only one reason the Soviets want to get into space and that's so they can conquer us on

"So why did Neil Armstrong just say what he did?" Because the military never tells anyone the real reason they send someone up in a rocket. If they had Armstrong say, 'One small killer satellite for a man; one giant killer satellite for mankind, it would have just tipped off the Russians we knew that they were planning to use the sky for military purposes. This way they think we just landed on the mooo because

no human on earth had ever dooe

it before."

The Associated Press PAMPLONA, Spain — The running of the bulls festival that draws tens of thousands of visitors annually to this city in northern Spain ended Wednesday with a comparatively low casualty toll. Organizers said bulls gored only four men, one of them gravely, in the seven days of drinking, danc-ing and "running of the bulls."

Since the festival started in 1591, 52 persons have been gored to death by the bulls. The last two deaths occurred in 1980, one of the bloodiest festivals.

"Maybe we do plan to use space exploration for peace," my wife

"Women live in a dream world. Even if that was its original pur-pose, oo military establishment worth its salt would ignore the opportunities of space for waging all-out war. Just think, in our lifetime there will be weapons poised up in the heavens aimed at any target on the globe. Man, by just pressing a button, will be able to send them hurtling down on us at the speed "Is that your dream world?" she asked.

"Of course not. But we have to face reality. The nation that dominates space will dominate the world. Do you think we're going to continue to spend billions of dol-lars on a program that doesn't have any strategic defensive value? We're not idiots. Mark my words. In a few years from now we're going to send up a space shottle with a tiny military package in it. Then the Soviets are going to send up one with a larger military pack-age. Then we're going to send one up even bigger than a bread box. And before you know it, the only thing that will be allowed on space vehicles will be military equipment."

"Hip-hip-hooray," my wife said.
"Of course we won't use ours unless they use theirs. We don't want to start a war. We just want to deter one. What better deterrent than a satellite bristling with atomie weapons flying over the Soviet Union every 24 hours? It might fi-nally bring about the dream for peace that all mankind has been waiting for. Once we have parity in the heavens, we can all sleep better on earth."

"So that's what you think this space program is all about?" They may not have had it mind when they started it. But now that we know what we can do in space, we've got to make it pay off mili-tarily, or it woo't make any scien-

And so the other day when watched the space shuttle land, and knew the tiny military package on board was safe, I, like all Americans, breathed a sigh of relief.

I said to my wife, or whoever was with me, "Fasten your seat belt baby. It's a whole new ball

Federico Fellini

By Thomas Ouinn Curtiss International Herald Tribune

ROME - Federico Fellini is Rembarking on a new film —
"E la nave va" (And the Ship Sails On) — after two years raising funds for it. From various sources - including an African millionaire admirer to whom he refers as "my black angel" - he has acquired the necessary $6 million, a pittance compared to the sums expended on even lesser Hollywood products these days. Now he is impatient to get on with it.

Clad in a white summer suit, his grey hair tousled, this sturdy, enduring giant seemed as im-mense as Rodin's statue of Balzac as he settled in an armchair in the lobby of Rome's Hotel Excelsior, where he maintains a- business office.

Fellini, recently turned 60, is in glowing health and exuberant spirits. The prospect of his latest project appears to have rejuvenated him. His dark eyes light up as he talks of his plans. He is again eager for the fray of the "floors" and wants no more enforced vacations.

Information Manie

The thirst for information is a mania of our time," he declared. Everyone is in a constant state anticipation. Here you are waiting to hear what I have to say, and here I am wondering about the outcome of my film."
Fellini's English is eloquent and picturesque. He pauses dow and then to select a descriptive adjective, meditates upon it, summons the exact word and it comes. Occasionally he drops into ant point. "This frantic quest to know the future is a theme of my film. The script that I have written with Tonino Guerra mirrors it in a story of a voyage, a modern odys-scy," he explained.

The evidence from which these high personages draw their conclusions is a tangled web of halftruths and falsehoods. Pellimi suspects that the public is more deluded than enlightened by the dissemination of news.

The film will he made without location excursions or exteriors and without going to sea at all. Every sequence and the ocean background will be shot on stages at Cinecittà. "Like painters," said Fellini, "moviemakers work in studios." Dante Ferretti, the scenic designer, is constructing sets on eight stages at the Rome film studios to enable the crew to move without delay from one set to another and back again, al-though, Fellini said, "I may linger on one set longer than foreseen." Cinema in Peril

Fellini is disturbed by the general state of the cinema today. Can it survive?" be asked rhetorically, making a gloomy gri-mace. "It seems impossible, but the cinema is an impossible realm. It is always having a crisis of some sort or complaining about its aches and woes. Still it has never been in such peril. It is threatened by television, cable television, mounting costs, dwindling audiences, but, worse, it is threatened from within.

"Many producers have a child-ish attitude that is debasing it. They believe that a sensationally shocking subject - some gross obscenity or some outrageous cruelty ferociously shown — is a sufficient reason for making a motion picture. Direction, acting, writing mean nothing to them. The audacity of the subject will attract however bad the direction, the acting the writing.

"Quality has almost disappeared. A subject is a mere thing and mere things are nothing in art — or even in life. They must be filtered through expressive inter-pretation that makes them vital and fascinating. Style must rule over material. That is a law of art. Yet despite the depressing cir-cumstances the cinema finds itself in, I welcome the challenge of the moment

When his new film nears completion Fellini is scheduled to begin a series of five one-hour suspense films for RAI, the Italian state television network, dealing with crime investigations in Rome. He is an avid reader of thrillers; Dashiell Hammett is one of his favorites.

Fellini in his films has shown many sides of the Eternal City ancient Rome in "Satyricon," contemperary Rome in "La Dolce Vita" and others, and 18th-century Rome in "Casanova." Why has he never turned his cinematic attentions to Renaissance Rome?

"I am the renaissance," he replied with a broad grin.
